Florida Model: Navigating Referral Relationships Between Outpatient Addiction Treatment and Recovery Residences

Level of Instruction: All

The reimbursement landscape for addiction treatment has transformed over the past decade. Although insurance coverage and benefits have expanded access to care, conflicts have also escalated between treatment providers and third party payors (insurance companies, self-funded employer plans, and government health plans). This program will survey the "battle lines" and points of tension that have emerged in disputes between addiction treatment providers and payors, including utilization management and medical necessity, patient financial responsibility, procurement of coverage, and other "fraud and abuse" issues around marketing, offering practical guidance on risk management and provider rights in payment disputes.
