The firm's move was sparked by the law firm's rapid growth in recent years to nearly 50 people, including 26 attorneys.

"Our move to doubling our office space was the next milestone in our business growth strategy," said managing partner Harry Nelson. "Our firm is blessed with an increase in work, resulting from the continuing evolution of U.S. healthcare. In addition, we're proud of becoming an 'in-demand' place for healthcare lawyers to work." The Los Angeles Business Journal also ranked Nelson Hardiman #10 on its 2018 survey of Best Places to Work in Los Angeles the firm's second year in a row on the list. According to Nelson, the firm is seriously exploring the opening of a Northern California office as well as moving forward on plans for an office in Orange County in the near future.

In expanding its headquarters in Los Angeles with more than triple its current office footprint, the move supports the firm's growth strategy by providing multiple larger presentation spaces for Nelson Hardiman's frequent calendar of educational and networking events for the healthcare and life sciences community. "We have become a crossroads of all things healthcare in Los Angeles," commented Nelson.

The move was also precipitated by the expanding needs of several organizations that have grown out of the firm's industry leadership over the past decade. 1100 Glendon will also be home to a number of other healthcare and life sciences organizations including the marijuana compliance consulting group MMLG, healthcare compliance consulting group Compliagent, and the education and advocacy organization Behavioral Health Association of Providers \(BHAP\). In addition, healthcare M&A advisory group Keval Health will be a subtenant at 1100 Glendon.
