

How USC's Tyndall settlement compares with other school payouts

Managing partner Harry Nelson was interviewed by the Los Angeles Times regarding USC's recent Tyndall settlement. Harry provides his expert analysis comparing Michigan State University's lawsuit settlement payouts to the victims of former associate professor Nassar who sexually abused hundreds of young girls and women.

From the Article:

Harry Nelson, a healthcare lawyer in Los Angeles, said that based on the allegations against Tyndall, it appears more people were egregiously abused by Nassar. Yet, he pointed out, the Tyndall payment is not significantly smaller, a sign that society's tolerance for bad behavior is going down.

"The Larry Nassar case informs this case dramatically," he said. "The fact that it's only twice as much is telling to me that the value of these cases and the cost of allowing situations that shouldn't be allowed to continue to go on is going up for all institutions."

Read the Full Article